

Strengths and Values Sort

FOR THE STUDENT

Separates what you are good at from what you care about — because a job that has one but not the other is where people get stuck at 30.

When: Before choosing a major, or any time "what should I do?" feels impossible

What I am good at

Tick honestly. Being good at something you dislike still counts here.

- ☐ Explaining things so people understand
- ☐ Fixing or building physical things
- ☐ Noticing patterns in numbers or data
- ☐ Persuading people
- ☐ Staying calm when things go wrong
- ☐ Organising other people's chaos
- ☐ Making things look right
- ☐ Writing clearly
- ☐ Learning a system quickly
- ☐ Being patient with people who are struggling

What I want from work

Tick your top five only. The restriction is the point.

- ☐ Good money, honestly
- ☐ Helping people directly
- ☐ Time and freedom outside work
- ☐ Respect and standing
- ☐ Never doing the same day twice
- ☐ Working with my hands
- ☐ Working mostly alone
- ☐ Being part of a team
- ☐ Job security
- ☐ Building something of my own
- ☐ Living somewhere specific
- ☐ Being home for my family

Put them together

Three jobs that use what I am good at

---

---

---

Of those, which also give me what I want from work?

---

---

---

What am I missing — a skill, an experience, or information?

---

---

---

WORTH KNOWING

- ◆ Being good at something is not the same as wanting to do it all day.
- ◆ Money is allowed to be on the list. Pretending otherwise helps nobody.
- ◆ If nothing overlaps, you need more information, not a different personality.